That favourite steamer the Kinking is now undergoing a thorough overhaul at Kowloon docks, and will be ready to take the place of the White Cloud next week on the Macao route. The latter steamer will then be laid up to receive new boilers, which are now completed and only await the Government hydraulic test before being put on board. The White Cloud will then be in a condition to keep her time on the Macao line, where she is deservedly popular. We understand that when the White Cloud has been placed in order, the Pewan will take her turn and have the new furnaces put in which have been ready some time; she will also receive such repairs as may be found necessary The Company will, therefore, in the course of a few months be in a better position to carry on their business than they have ever been yet.

The Hailoong left for Amoy at 11 o'clock on the worning of the 21st September. Had it not been for this special service she would have left for Tamsai on the evening of the 15th. The time occupied n the round trip to Tameni and back is within four days. The value of the Halloong is $60,000. The work entailed extra labour on all belonging to the vessel. The number of junks assisting the Yerkshire was from thirteen to fifteen: They could have carried on a sea voyage from fifteen to twenty tons, and might have made the trip to Amoy in two days. It would have taken them at least three weeks to lighten the vessel if they had had to do it alone. Mr. H. C. A. Harris, chief officer of the Hailoong, gave evidence to a similar offect. This concluded the seas for the Hailong.

He thought there was planty of room in the Donglas for the cargo. The Attorney-General then addressed the court and argued that no salvage services had been rendered by the Hailoung to the Yorkshire, but that on the other hand she left the vessel on both eccasions in the same peril in which she found her. He referred to an authority as supporting his argument and showing that if one vessel left another in distress, although she might have a claim ou any cargo she had salved, she could not claim for salvage service to the ship itself. Referring to the evidence, he argued the cargo was not heavy, there being an immense number of persons employed in doing what had to be done, and there was no risk. whatever to the Hailoung, as she was anchored and perfectly under control. Mr. Francis replied, and said that under the agreement made at Amoy all Captain Ashton the business connected with this department will had to do, after towing the junks from Amoy to the Yorkshire, was to lie by for twenty-four hours, and any work done during that time or subsequently was to be a motter of arrangement between the captains. Captain Ashton gave Captain Lyons distinct notice that he would have to be paid as for salvage services for any work he did while he was lying by. That understanding was embodied in the second agreement, which had not been disputed. The services rendered by the Hailoung had materially tended towards the ultimate salvation of the Yorkshire In the previous case the Attorney General had claimed that the anobor which was got out on the port bow was the chief means of getting the ship off, and therefore the services rendered by the Hailoong in getting out that anchor must be regarded as material. the second occasion the Hailoong was on har regular voyage and at the request of the agents of the Forkshire again went to her assistance, and remained till the 21st. On that occasion valuable assistance was rendered in passing lines. and facilitating the working of the junks. He submitted that the Hailoung had broudered material aid to the salving of the ship independent of the salving of the cargo.

A FEAST IN THE WILDERNESS.

The special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph reports as follows from Ismailia :- " I received a summons to put in an appearance in gala attire at the Governor's palace, that I might have the honous of participating in a science feast given (Egyptian fashion) to Sir Garnet Wolseley by sundry Egyptian grandees. At the entrance to the house were stationed a posse of gentlemen in fezres, prominent amongst whom was a stout personage in white, much embroidered with gold, who bowed gravely with hand to brow, and through an interpreter hade us consider all he possessed as our own. This turned out to be the Governor himself-an impertant functionary at ordinary times here in Ismailia, a cypher now; and presently be took us each by the hand and led us within a little garden, illuminated a glorno with lamps, in the contre of which a round table was spread, with places laid for nine diners, chairs, and knives and forks. Hors d'œuvres in little dishes as at a French restaurant, occumbers, gherkins, sardines, fresh butter-nothing new and original apparently, but none the less interesting to the balf-starved. Glasses, too, suggestive of champagne, and, more delicious still, actually a verandah at the extreme end of the garden another set of gentlemen in red tarbouches of hands on hearts, and then we sat down to await the coming of the guasts of the evening. One's attention naturally turned to a fine-looking old man, with a closely clipped white beard who was the Nestor of the Egyptian Parliament, Egypt that he has been specially selected to nocompany the march and explain to sheikha and local magnates that the English Government mean well by the Egyptain people, and that such as are loyal to their Sovereign have nought to fear. A brave old man, as well as a wise-for when Arabi was first flinging out his rebel colours he tried bard to esjole this aged Minister to join bim, and at last, in baffled wrath, finding him steadfast in his loyalty, cried out, " Beware, or will kill you!" suiting the action to the word with drawn sabre. But the old man budged not. Kill me if you will. I am old, and of little further use," he raplied, simply, but so long as I live I will be faithful to my Sovereign. Near the grand old gentleman sat another, a splendidly stalwart specimen of a young Oriental -the man who by tast and promptitude saved the Khediye's life the other day at Alexandria: and next to him, again, all smiles and node, stood an Oriental Tarveydrop, general factotum, mas-Although the Chinese have existed as a nation | ter of the ceremonics, and interpreter.
